Summer Researchers in Global Health

The Institute for Global Health Sciences hosts a six-week summer internship for rising Bay Area high school seniors that introduces students to global health concepts and immerses them in challenging, real-life projects with researchers at UCSF. Interns receive direct mentorship from global health experts and participate in weekly case discussions and group activities led by graduate student instructors. Topics include HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis, maternal health, preterm birth, climate change, COVID and emerging infectious diseases, and more. This is a hybrid program with a 30hr/week time commitment. There is no cost to participate. Interns with financial need may qualify for a stipend of $2,000.
