Field implementation

IBBS behavioral questionnaires

In this section we present behavioral questionnaires for three key populations at risk for HIV: MSM, PWID and FSW. These standardized questionnaires are a resource for countries to prepare for IBBS implementation and ultimately better understand the driving forces of the HIV epidemic among key populations. A secondary benefit is the use of these standardized questionnaires will allow for cross-country and cross-region comparisons among key populations.

These standardized questionnaires were based on multiple instruments developed for recent IBBSs in various countries. The synthesis of a single questionnaire for each key population involved input from expert HIV/AIDS researchers, consideration of indicators typically used for data analysis, and multiple rounds of questionnaire review. While these question and response sets have already been used in several countries, we recommend each country review them and make edits as necessary based on the key population and local needs.

We recommend the creation of a local questionnaire working group to discuss topics and length. Depending on local context, other topics, for example, mobility and migration may be appropriate to include. As with any behavioral questionnaire, the number of questions must be carefully considered. There should be sufficient data to allow meaningful analysis and description of the epidemic, balanced against interview length to ensure limited burden on participants. The quality of responses may suffer with lengthy questionnaires.

This chapter will

- Provide standardized behavioral questionnaires for MSM, PWID and FSW which can be utilized for implementing behavioral surveillance surveys
- Suggest variations of questions and responses based on local context
